2014 NRA National Police Shooting Championships

The 2014 National Police Shooting Championships opened Monday, September 15, as the sun rose across the white, dusky sand of Albuquerque's Shooting Range Park, Gordon Eden, Albuquerque's chief of police, welcomed the crowd.

"It's been said many times some of the best competitors there are in the United States are here to participate in the National Championship," proclaimed Eden. "We welcome you and this great group of national competitors. I know everybody here will do their best, for that's what happens when we bring together the best of the best."

The best of the best arrived from locations near and far. From as close as Bernalillo County and from as far away as Munich, they came with dreams of a title and to withstand the three-day trial where agents, officers, and deputies center on the bullseye with up to six different handguns. That's what makes NPSC an event unlike any other.

Semi-Automatics were first on the agenda, starting with the Open Class 1500 pistols and then Distinguished Pistol and Stock Semi-Auto. Competitors battled nerves, high winds, and a blistering sun as they sent rounds downrange. The name atop the leader board was a familiar one: Senior U.S. Border Patrol Agent Robert Vadasz.

"I think the first day in this sport, it's important to jump out ahead both mentally and physically to give yourself a window," Vadasz explained. "This is a hard range to shoot, so if you can stay in the mid-90s, then it's very intimidating for other shooters."

Day Two called for revolvers. Another 250+ shots later, Vadasz remained at the top of the board.

A few new names appeared as well, such as Sean Foote from the Los Angeles Police Department and Douglas Peoble from the Pinal County Sheriff's Office. The FBI's Cathy Schroeder was hanging in there, too. Schroeder captured High Woman in the Service Revolver Match. Peoble managed to walk away with this year's President's Cup, an aggregate of the Distinguished Semi-Auto and Distinguished Revolver matches. There's more to NPSC than just the overall winner.

Day Three was so different that it almost turned the entire championship on its head. While running through a second magazine from the 25-yard line during the Off Duty Sidearm match, Vadasz's gun jammed. There were two rounds left in the magazine and precious seconds ticking away.

"I got through one magazine with no problem. Reload, come back out, get through four rounds, and experience a slide lock failure," illustrated Vadasz. "Rip the magazine, reload, come back up, and let two rounds fly."

What flew was a 9 and an X. Typical.

The day ended as most expected. Vadasz, despite the malfunction, won the Grand Aggregate title with room to spare. Right behind him were teammates from the U.S. Border Patrol. Detective Stefanie Diaz of the Los Angeles Police Department and her 6551-348x won the High Woman championship, Steffen Vogt from CBP Germany captured High International, and Peoble managed to snag the High Sheriff title with a 6580-397x.

More than 30 trophies were distributed. Service Revolver, Stock Semi-Auto, High Conservation, High Retired and more were called to the stage, each returning home with a souvenir from their days in the Land of Enchantment: a new tale, a new experience, and a new appreciation for the NRA National Police Shooting Championships.

Line of Duty Death Benefit Increases

The National Rifle Association is increasing its Line of Duty Death benefit from $25,000 to $35,000. This benefit is automatically available to any current NRA Member who is also a public law enforcement officer and is killed in the line of duty.

“America’s brave law enforcement officers get up every day, strap on a gun, and put themselves in harm’s way to protect our communities and families,” said Wayne LaPierre, EVP and CEO of the NRA. “They are the good guys who are there for us. The 5 million men and women of the NRA proudly stand with them and their families.”

Started well over 20 years ago, the Line of Duty Death benefit is extended to the survivor(s) of the officer’s family. It requires no additional effort on the part of any officer, as employment as a public law enforcement officer will be validated at the time of the claim.

“I hope we never lose another law enforcement officer in the line of duty,” said NRA Law Enforcement Director Glen Hoyer. “God forbid it happens, but if it does, we want to be there to help the family of the fallen officer.”

NRA’s Law Enforcement Division was launched in 1960 to provide the law enforcement community with a means to certify law enforcement firearm instructors. Since then, their activities have expanded to include competition, as a direct extension of training, as well as other assistance to law enforcement and military.

Tactical Police Competition

The NRA Law Enforcement Division created the Tactical Police Competition (TPC) program to encourage patrol officers to gain more experience, training and time on the range using their duty firearms. While traditional standard qualification courses of fire are very important, we believe officers need additional practice time, live fire exercises, and challenges to hone their skills and gain additional experience in handling and deploying duty firearms.

TPC is different in many ways from other combat or tactical competitions. Some notable differences include:

- TPC is only for law enforcement officers, members of the U.S. Military and private sector law enforcement officers.
- Firearms, holsters and other equipment must be “patrol duty gear.”
- Courses of fire are designed as either Skill-Based Courses or Scenario-Based Courses.
  - Skill-Based Courses challenge the officer’s skills and abilities in handling, accuracy and overall proficiency with a given firearm system under set conditions.
  - Scenario Based Courses place the officer in a hypothetical law enforcement encounter. The officer must then decide how to run the course and solve the challenges presented according to their own tactics and skills.

TPC is also a part of the National Police Shooting Championships. For more information on TPC and past match results, visit our website at <http://tpc.nra.org>.

LAW ENFORCEMENT AND SOCIAL MEDIA

BY SARAH GERVASE
NRA ASSISTANT GENERAL COUNSEL

Officers know that much good can come from using social media. Sites run by departments can help build relationships with the community and help raise awareness of local concerns. They can give members of the public an easy way to communicate with and to help law enforcement. Criminals themselves often make cops' jobs easier by publically posting evidence of their crimes. This past summer in Indianapolis, officers were interviewing a young man as a potential witness to a minor crime. For some reason, the man invited officers to check out his YouTube videos. Officers took him up on that and quickly found a series of videos of him shooting stolen guns and enjoying other property taken from nearby burglaries.

Those benefits aside, officers need to be aware of the potential drawbacks of using social media. Too many officers are hurting themselves or their departments by not using Facebook and other sites wisely. Officers do have certain rights that must and should be respected, but they also have a duty to themselves and to their departments to be smart about what they post.

First and foremost, officers must think of their own safety and the safety of their families. All cops know that people often reveal more personal information than they think they are. Posting children's photos, even without names, can give clues about where those children attend school or places they go for activities. Giving updates from gyms, restaurants, and checking in at locations can be a virtual itinerary. In 2010, police in Phoenix made a DUI stop and discovered a CD with the names and photographs of more than 30 officers and civilian employees who were to be targeted. The source of that information were the personal Facebook profiles of those officers and employees.

It does not take much Internet savvy to reconstruct someone's life from a well-updated Facebook account. Officers know that, and yet they still can get sloppy about protecting their own safety. The better course is to assume that anyone who holds a big enough grudge to want to harm an officer will put the time and thought into figuring out how. At the very least, officers should make sure to set their accounts to "friends only" or to use other available privacy settings.

Another reason to use social media carefully is to avoid jeopardizing criminal cases. Anything an officer posts about being tired, hungover, or otherwise distracted is an easy way for a defense attorney to question an officer's perception or fitness for duty. Moreover, releasing certain evidence, say of photos of a drug bust, could be viewed as prejudicial to a defendant or could hurt other ongoing investigations. All those are unnecessary risks.

Officers' Facebook accounts have also played a role in civil suits alleging excessive force and wrongful death. In one case, the plaintiff requested the Facebook accounts of dozens of officers because of an inappropriate posting made by a single officer. In another case, a city refused to defend an officer in a wrongful death lawsuit because he had made Facebook comments about an unrelated case in another state. Anything posted online has the potential to be used against an officer whether it is directly relevant or not.

Supervisors and veterans should talk with younger officers and help them understand the risks. If inexperienced officers are posting too much or posting inappropriately, a quick talk may help open their eyes. Departments should also provide training – most officers will learn better in a live setting with real-life examples than by skimming a dry, multi-page document written by some lawyer.

Likewise, departments as a whole should have an established written policy that sets guidelines for social media use. Most large departments have such policies in order to protect the department as a whole and to warn officers about using sexually explicit language, any speech that could be interpreted as expressing bias, and saying anything else that could be embarrassing to the department. Departments should stick to these policies or risk claims of discrimination or unfairness if they do have to take disciplinary action against an officer. Some of those policies are available online if your department does not already have something similar.

United States Mint to Issue Commemorative Coins Honoring U.S. Marshals Service

Commemorative Coins will Raise Funds to Build U.S. Marshals Museum

The United States Marshals Service is the oldest and most versatile federal law enforcement agency in the United States. To commemorate its 225th anniversary, the United States Mint will produce high quality, modern commemorative coins to recognize and celebrate the agency's dedication to justice, integrity and service.

The United States Mint will unveil the three commemorative coin designs on July 23, 2014 and will make them available for purchase in limited quantities in early 2015.

The funds raised through surcharges on the coins will help construct the U.S. Marshals Museum in Fort Smith, Arkansas, which will be a national center of heritage and legacy of the accomplishments of the country's oldest federal law enforcement body. The museum hopes to educate visitors and inspire an appreciation of the work the U.S. Marshals have provided since 1789. Plans to break ground on the U.S. Marshals Museum are set for Sept. 24, 2014 with an anticipated opening date in 2017.

Congress authorizes no more than two commemorative coin sets per year that honor important milestones in American history, places, people – and even institutions. According to the United States Mint, these coins “commemorate important aspects of American history and culture as well as help raise money for important causes.” A surcharge added to the price of these coins goes to organizations and projects that benefit the community. In fact, the March of Dimes will have a commemorative silver dollar issued in 2015 and will be the primary recipient organization of the funds raised.

According to the United States Mint, “since the modern commemorative coin program began in 1982, the United States Mint has raised more than $418 million in surcharges to help build new museums, maintain national monuments like the Vietnam War Memorial, preserve historical sites like George Washington's home, support various Olympic programs, and much more.”

The U.S. Marshals' commemorative coins are not intended for general circulation and are produced in limited quantities. The United States Mint is authorized to issue a maximum of 100,000 $5 gold coins, 500,000 silver dollar coins and 750,000 clad half-dollars. Purchasers of the coin, in addition to purchasing a collectible coin, will be honoring the U.S. Marshals Service and promoting the mission of the four recipient organizations.

For more information about the limited edition commemorative coins and when and where they will be available for purchase, visit <http://usmint.gov>. For more information about the national U.S. Marshals Museum, visit <http://www.usmarshalsmuseum.com>.

How is the money spent?

The funds from the surcharges earned through the sale of the three U.S. Marshals Service commemorative coins will benefit four organizations. The first $5 million in available surcharges will go to the U.S. Marshals Museum in Fort Smith, Arkansas. Surcharges in excess of $5 million will be divided equally among the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children, the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association and the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial Fund. Here is how those surcharges will be used:

- U.S. Marshals Museum – preservation, maintenance and display of artifacts and documents.
- National Center for Missing & Exploited Children – finding missing children and combating child sexual exploitation.
- Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association – assist the family members of federal law enforcement officers who have become disabled or killed in the line of duty. Federal law enforcement employees and their families will receive assistance in select instances, such as severe trauma or financial loss where no other source is available. Funds also will be distributed to students pursuing careers in law enforcement and provide selective grants to charitable organizations.
- National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial Fund – support the construction of the National Law Enforcement Museum and the preservation and display of artifacts.

Shooting Sports USA, the National Rifle Association's free, monthly magazine for sport and target shooting, is celebrating more than 100 years of reporting on the shooting sports. Originally an insert for Arms and the Man, the publication that would become NRA's American Rifleman in 1923, the rising popularity of competitive shooting led to the creation of a separate magazine in 1947, named NRA Tournament News. In 1976, the magazine was renamed American Marksman and began publishing more articles oriented toward the competitive shooter. The journal again changed its name in 1988 to Shooting Sports USA, and has continued to be the top sports shooting magazine in the United States.

Whether your interests are in equipment, interviews with the pros or finding a match close to home, Shooting Sports USA has a little bit of everything, and it's all online in searchable archives. Want to find an article on improving focus? Just search for it and every article since 2009 will be listed in seconds. Interested in how to tune a wheel gun? How about an eyeglass prescription specifically for shooting? No problem. ## Retired and Off-Duty Officer Self-Defense Insurance

The NRA Endorsed Insurance Program is proud to recognize the sacrifices made by law enforcement officers. To show their appreciation, the program is offering a discounted self-defense coverage for retired law enforcement officers and off-duty police officers who are NRA members. The coverage starts at only $50 annually and is designed to affordably protect retired and off-duty officers. With limits up to $250,000, officers can receive coverage for criminal and civil defense costs, the cost of civil suit defense, and criminal defense reimbursement.

Purchasing this coverage is easy! Simply visit www.lawenforcementselfdefense.com and select the option to purchase coverage on the right.
